

To whom it may concern,

Since summer 2016, we, the Climate Institute, have been partnering with Majestic Trees. We recognize their efforts to reforest parts of the Dominican Republic and look forward to their expansion into other countries in the Caribbean Region. We also support Tree Trading World for its potential to provide a platform for funding reforestation efforts. This has a potentially global impact. We will do all we can to see these visions come to fruition. We find that these companies' values and practices closely align with our mission statement and thus, we are proud to work with them. We have connected Majestic Trees and Tree Trading World with the World Resources Institute's (one of the most respected environmental NGOs in the world, based in Washington D.C.) Initiative 20x20 program, a non-profit platform that creates a network of impact investors, governments, and project developers so that they can work together on the goal of replanting 20 million hectares of forest in the Latin American and Caribbean Region by the year 2020. Several weeks ago, Tree Trading World and Majestic Trees signed on as official partners of 20x20.

The Climate Institute is helping Majestic Trees and Tree trading world by

- facilitating dialog with investors, non-profit partners, and government representatives,
- providing copyediting and consulting services,
- and securing carbon offset credits for sale for creating an additional long-term revenue stream.

The Climate Institute is the world's first organization to focus on the issue of climate, having been working on carbon emissions mitigation strategies and adaptation measures for the last thirty years. We look forward to participating in Majestic Trees's and Tree Trading World's sustained success in the coming decades.

Sincerely,

Brian Fowler
